Tasting notes

Gilpin's Westmorland Extra Dry Gin The distillation year is not a "vintage" date as the producer strives to make every batch identical & do not claim that the botanicals or spirit used were picked/distilled during the calendar year in question (which would be required for a true vintage). After distillation the gin is kept in an inert cask until bottling. The gin does not change or develop in the cask. The batch number then shows which batch of the relevant year the bottle comes from. Each bottle then has its own unique number.
